Abstract
To reconstruct the 3D surface of the retina using a sequence of fluorescein angiograms taken during the same examination with an uncalibrated camera. Such approach could provide a simple way to extract 3D information without the use of a stereo image acquisition setup. 3D surface information can greatly facilitate the diagnosis of fundus diseases like macular degeneration and glaucoma.